Q + A for Supervisors

Q. My employee apologizes constantly for her inadequate performance. I know she is sincere, but I feel a bit guilty putting pressure on her and taking some job action that could cause her to lose her job. She won't go to the EAP. I feel torn. I am more frustrated with myself than with her!

A. Your employee may indeed be sincere, but she is not a satisfactory performer. When she apologizes without correcting her performance, she effectively avoids disciplinary action you are unwilling to take. Until now, you have been manipulated to avoid taking stronger measures to correct her performance. But remember, discipline is not punishment; it is a tool for correcting performance. Your own performance is suffering because you are not managing this situation properly. What's more, if her problems are chronic, eventually the current performance issue will get worse. This could lead to a crisis you want to avoid. Consider this: By not acting more decisively, you have enabled her problems to grow worse. Not all employees are defensive when confronted. Some simply agree with you and but not feel motivated enough to change. Consult with the EAP about your indecisiveness. The EAP won't tell you to take disciplinary action or suggest what that action should be, but it will help you with personal issues that keep you avoidant and indecisive.

Q. Drug testing is part of our comprehensive drug-free workplace program. I know that a test will tell us whether indeed someone is positive and what drug they are using, but will it also prove they were impaired? My employee insists he was not impaired.

A. Your company may conduct a urine drug test in accordance with its policy, and a positive test alone is grounds for taking administrative action. However, a urine test does not prove impairment. But that is not the focus of the policy, so your employee's argument that he or she was not impaired is irrelevant. An employee can be completely sober but still test positive for a substance, because metabolites can be present in the urine for days or even weeks. Many people confuse the objectives of business organizations that test for drugs of abuse with those of law enforcement officials, who must be able to prove impairment if a person is arrested for drunk driving. A field sobriety test or a certain blood alcohol level establishes the legal existence of this impairment.

Q. My employee participated in a court-mandated driver education course related to alcohol and drug use after a recent DUI arrest. The court did not refer him to treatment, and I disagree with that decision. I think he's an alcoholic, because frankly, I am recovering myself. Can I involve the EAP?

A. If your employee's job performance is satisfactory and the employer has not determined that the arrest and court referral constitute a business concern (i.e., "conduct unbecoming of our employees"), then you don't have a basis for a formal supervisor referral. You do know about the DUI, however, and that an assessment of alcoholism was not made by the court. How did you come by this information? Did the employee volunteer it? If so, suggesting a self-referral to the EAP as a source of help and assessment is appropriate. Regarding your status as a recovering alcoholic, be cautious. There is nothing wrong with sharing personal information, but don't diagnose your employee or engage in a diagnostic discussion. Realize that the crisis has passed, and the pursuit of treatment for alcoholism is usually motivated by a sense of urgency based on circumstances. You're not likely to inspire a revelation. Still, such conversations can play a role in a future decision to enter treatment.

The EAP can help.

Q. The EAP has been a wonderful service for our organization. Many employees have been helped, and it is a great resource for our supervisors. I've noticed not all supervisors use the EAP equally. Other than simply lack of training, why might some be resistant?

A. Although EAPs help both employees and supervisors, and protect the organization by reducing behavioral risk, some supervisors may feel that the EAP takes away something that has given their job meaning: counseling or at least advising employees about personal problems, in addition to using persuasion to inspire changes. Some supervisors possess a style that includes being a confidant, a friend, and a wise advice giver. Some supervisors are more empathetic than others and are more interested in the human experience. This is positive, but their identity may be too closely connected to how others look up to them beyond pure performance and leadership matters. The desire to play a larger role in employees' lives can conflict with the role of supervisor and the critical link needed in facilitating referral to the EAP for troubled workers with severe problems that the supervisor is wholly unable to resolve or identify.

Q. What is the "Lone Ranger Syndrome" that is sometimes used to describe supervisors and how they conduct themselves in their role?

A. The Lone Ranger Syndrome is a construct originated 50 years ago by Arthur Purvis, an EAP author and federal employee personnel specialist. It describes supervisors who take on so much responsibility for managing workers' performance as well as their personal problems that they begin to burn out. They may feel anger, confusion, frustration, and helplessness, and their state of overwork may lead them to ineffective management practices. When EAPs first originated in the mid-1970s, it was important to recognize this construct in order to motivate supervisors to come forward and take advantage of what the EAP could offer them in the way of relief.

Resources & Events

This Month's Personal Advantage Webinar

Riding the Waves of Change

Change in life is inevitable. While we can't always control what happens, we can control how we choose to respond to it. What we tell ourselves about change will have a large impact on our feelings and behaviors. During this webinar, we'll demonstrate techniques for successfully navigating change and using it as an opportunity for learning and growth.

The monthly webinars with Personal Advantage are available on the 1st day of each month and past topics are available for viewing at any time. To view the webinars, log into the Uprise Health member site with your assigned Access Code and click "Work-Life Services". Certificates of Completion are available by setting up a personal login and password within the Personal Advantage site.

Sleep Awareness Week

March 13-19, 2022

Show your support for Sleep Awareness Week sponsored by the National Sleep Foundation (NSF) that promotes community awareness and support resources. Learn more about the benefits of optimal sleep and how sleep affects health, well-being, and safety. www.thenf.org

Product Spotlight: Legal Services

Avoiding Tax Filing Fraud

As we enter another tax season, thieves are prepared yet again to file false tax returns, collect fraudulent tax refunds, and make it extremely difficult for employees to file their 2021 taxes. To help combat these fraudsters, our legal services partner, CLC has a training webinar that is available for viewing on the Work Life member portal. To access the training and learn more about the legal services that are provided as part of your EAP program, log into Uprise Health with your access code, go to Work Life Services and select Legal Services.

Announcing Our New Resource Library

Helping everyone be their best today and every day moving forward.

Uprise Health recognizes that our members interact with our services in a variety of ways. We remain committed to ensuring the success of effective communications and training programs through our webinars, newsletters, and resources that cover top-of-mind topics including stress, workplace transition, finances, legal support, diversity, and crisis events.

New Online Resource Library for Members & Workplace Leaders

We are pleased to announce the launch of our newest member engagement tool. As part of your current program with Uprise Health, all members and family household members have an extensive online resource library. User-friendly design, filters, and search features provide easy access to find the latest newsletters, mental health and work-life flyers, training, and leadership support materials. Use your access code to log into uprisehealth.com/members to access the new resource library.
